A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to Adulthood

by Roy Alden Atwood

College happens.

For better or for worse, a college degree is expected in today's marketplace. Yet the college experience—arguably the most powerful influence on a child's intellectual and spiritual development between the teen years and adulthood—is also the least scrutinized of all levels of education among Christians, including those associated with classical Christian schools.

Parents, teachers, and administrators will obsess over the smallest details of the educational philosophy, curriculum, staffing, and pedagogy of their primary and secondary programs, but suddenly go numb to those concerns when they look to the thirteenth grade. They will demand academic competency and unimpeachable moral integrity from every teacher who crosses their children's paths at school, but shrug off the fact that many of their children's future professors reject biblical authority, defend immorality, and treat the Christian faith with disdain.

Why do we tolerate at the college-level what we would rightly abhor at the primary and secondary levels? Why do we, who have labored so long to help our children recover the lost tools of learning and declare the Lordship of Christ over all of life, knowingly send our children off for the finishing touches of their education to colleges fundamentally at war with the Western tradition and the Christian faith that nourished it?

This disconnect in our thinking between secondary and post-secondary education is truly stunning. And the problem has only grown worse in recent years because parents and educators increasingly hold one or both of the following assumptions:

- that the goal of higher education differs significantly with the goal of primary and secondary education, and/or
- that having received a classical Christian high school education means students are fully prepared to “handle” campus secularism and God-hating professors.

Both assumptions are dead wrong and are potentially lethal to our children and to the future of our classical Christian schools. Examining these assumptions more carefully should loosen the grip of the dominant secular paradigm and help us become better advisors to our covenant children facing college. Hopefully, in the process it will also refresh our own thinking about the goal of classical Christian education at all levels and revive a vision for reformation in every area of life beyond the twelfth grade.

*This disconnect in our thinking

The Goal of Education

The idea that the goal or telos of education changes between high school and college was a novel one introduced at the end of the 19th century. Since the Middle Ages, higher education's singular purpose has been the same as education in the younger years: to guide a person through the paideia of the Lord into Christian maturity and adulthood by illuminating His works of truth, beauty, and goodness across the ages. Educators did not train them to do something, but educated them to be someone: a man or woman of unimpeachable Christian character equipped for every good work (Ephesians 2:10). The common goal of virtually all high schools and colleges in America until the 19th century, was to grow up the next generation of covenant children into knowledgeable, wise, and godly adults.

Academic specialization and vocational training came later. They understood that the classical Christian model prepared men and women to succeed in almost any field because they had learned how to learn, how to see relationships between things, how to solve problems, how to reason well, how to work hard. In other words, a classical education from a Christian worldview was career preparation rightly understood for 20 or 30 years down the road, not just for entry level skills.

But we don't view education and career preparation that way today because of what happened in the years following the War Between the States. The philosophy of pragmatism made being "practical" and making things "work" into idols. As theological liberals, pragmatists called students to "seek first job training" and to leave all that kingdom of God and righteousness stuff for later.

Wealthy captains of industry funded scores of colleges and universities to start vocational training programs and research labs. They offered so much cash for teaching "practical skills" that few classical Christian colleges could resist. Soon the liberal arts were reduced to an anemic "core curriculum," and "general education" was reduced to half or less of four year programs.

Land grant colleges were established in every state to revamp higher education as training programs for industry and government. They were also designed to end the dominance of the classical Christian college and to make Christians pay for the new academic secularism with our own tax dollars.

These forces have seriously undermined Christian higher education today and blurred the biblical distinction between education and training. Even historically Christian colleges have become almost indistinguishable from pagan schools in chasing after vocationalism and higher rankings in U.S. News & World Report. The result has been the worst of both worlds: students are now poorly trained and poorly educated—and still immature. As the former dean of Harvard College recently observed in his new book, Excellence Without A Soul: How A Great University Forgot Education,

The result has been the worst of both worlds: students are now poorly trained and poorly educated—and still immature.

"[Universities] have forgotten that the fundamental job of undergraduate education is to turn eighteen and nineteen-year-olds into twenty-one and twenty-two-year-olds, to help them grow up . . . and to leave college as better human beings" (p. xii).

Overestimating a High School Graduate's Preparation

Classical Christian school graduates are generally better prepared academically for college than government school graduates. But that does not mean they have the maturity or backbone to stand up to today's overwhelming campus secularism. In fact, it takes a lot of hubris and naiveté to think that any 18-year-old is up to that task just because they went through a classical Christian high school.

The moral corruptions at today's universities are legion. During my 25-plus years in public and private higher education, I have personally witnessed undergraduate professors have affairs with their students, students cheat en masse on exams and papers, faculty members lie about their professional record in order to get tenure, an accrediting body reject a Christian college because its commitment to creation ex nihilo was deemed "contrary to basic knowledge," and on and on.

The problem is not that sin happens, but that today's postmodern institutions have no meaningful standards by which to distinguish between right and wrong, moral and immoral. And what standards they have are often enforced for ideological reasons. The result is an academic world turned upside down: sin is institutionalized, righteousness vilified. Homosexuals have tax supported campus organizations and a privileged place in the pantheon of "campus diversity," while college administrators forbid Christian professors from even discussing intelligent design in a science class.

Anyone who thinks that our college-bound sons and daughters can "handle" today's campus secularism without serious collateral damage has not been on today's university campuses recently or is not doing their own homework.

Conclusion: The Cement is Still Wet

The intellectual and spiritual dangers today's colleges pose to Christian students would be less worrisome if new college students were firmly set in their worldview or immune to the forces of darkness. But they are not, and every professor knows it. Professors know better than most just how wet and pliable a college student's cement still is. Even a secularist knows that a college student, when he matures, will become like his teacher.

The idea that Christian students will have more influence on their peers and professors than the other way around would be laughable, if it weren't so tragically misguided. Of course, God protects

His own and He can work miracles, but the missionary-student just out of high school, classical or otherwise, is ill-prepared to face the fierce spiritual warfare waging on university campuses. Secular professors can see naïve Christian students coming a mile away and they can be very skilled at turning the tables, casting doubts about everything they hold sacred and dear. Many leftist professors, especially, see it as their mission to devour such weak and overconfident evangelicals.

High school graduates may have much on the ball, but they are still young and impressionable. The hard work of nurturing them into mature adults is not done. Leaving that work to a secular campus or Christian college that has swallowed the secular vocational paradigm is not the answer. They are the problem.

As long as Christian parents and teachers and their children blindly follow the dominant paradigm for higher education, secularists will continue to dominate our colleges and universities and the way to Christian maturity and adulthood for our children will remain constricted. The way to bring the next generation into full Christian adulthood is to recover the biblical goal for higher education. That will require creating and supporting a new generation of classical Christian colleges which maintain continuity with the good work begun at our primary and secondary classical Christian schools.

The reformation of K-12 education has not happened over night. It has worked like leaven over the past 25 years. The reformation of higher education may take longer. But we start where we can and ask God to bless our modest efforts. But if we can revive the classical Christian paradigm in higher education, then perhaps there won't be so many funny things happening to our children or our children's children on their way to adulthood.

Book Review

REVIEWED BY PATCH BLAKEY

A young Christian man recently told me, “You don’t need a bunch of ugly facts about the public schools as a reason to not put your children in them. You just need to know that the Bible commands parents to provide their children with a godly education, all of the time.” I agreed with him, but then wondered why so many evangelical Christian parents send their children to be educated in the government’s public school system. Is it that these Christian parents have attention deficit disorder when it comes to hearing the Word of God?

Regardless of the reasons Christian parents may think that sending their children to the government schools is fine, there still are a lot of “ugly facts” that parents need to be aware of. Bruce Shortt has done his homework in his book, The Harsh Truth About Public Schools, to lay out those facts with incredible detail and documentation (some chapters have well over 200 footnoted comments). In some cases, the truth is so vile that it would get an “R” rating or worse if it were in a movie and not in the public school system. But Shortt isn’t just being salacious or sensationalistic in documenting this material. He is being frank and forthright with Christian parents who should know better, but haven’t done their homework. For those Christian parents who are aware that the government schools are bad, I dare say that most haven’t even the remotest idea just how bad they truly are. Shortt makes it painfully clear.

Why do Christian parents object to such things as Halloween which occurs one night a year, but have no qualms with sending their children to the government’s public schools for nine months out of the year to be indoctrinated in all forms of religion (other than Christianity) and the occult? Shortt points out that while Christianity is shunted out of the public schools, Islam is actively being forced on children in some states. In addition, have you ever heard of the Waldorf curriculum and Anthroposophy? They are growing in popularity among government charter schools in this country. You won’t want to wait too long before you find out what they are and the adverse impact they will have on your children. However, sometimes a direct question to a teacher or administrator won’t result in a direct answer. This is even more problematic.

There has been much public concern expressed by prominent Christian and non-Christian media personnel within the past few someone may argue. And I have a bridge for sale that will get you to Brooklyn, if you are that gullible. Shortt explains in detail what has happened to “dumb down” standardized tests, reset the limits for a passing score, alter the data, limit who may take the tests (so that average tests scores will seem improved), and much worse. “I don’t believe it!” you say? “It couldn’t happen in this country!” you say? Read Shortt’s book and prepare to be illuminated.

How about all of those “drug free zones” around many public schools and the effectiveness of the local DARE program? All “smoke and mirrors.” Shortt observes that the biggest purveyor of drugs among young people is the government’s public school system. Oh, yes, and documentation shows that Ritalin has serious detrimental physical and psychological effects on children, just like other drugs that are illegal. No one yet knows what the long-term effect will be from Ritalin use in children. Is there any documented evidence that AD/HD is really a diagnosable problem? If you say “yes,” then why does it disappear over the summer? Read Shortt’s book. The situation is far worse than you think.

Okay, you believe the government school system is bad, but you want to reform the public schools. But is this really possible? What about the $500 billion dollars that finances the government’s public school system each year? How altruistic are the unions that control the system and benefit from the influx of these dollars? Are they going to cheerfully let this income go away? What is the link between the teachers unions and the sorry years about the increasing emphasis on alternative life styles and gender choices being actively promoted by the public school system. Shortt lists some of the perversions that are being taught in the name of “education” even to elementary-aged students. It’s worse in the secondary. If you are pro-life and have your children in the government’s public school system, once you read Shortt’s book, you will wonder why on earth you ever subjected the impressionable young minds of your children to such a pro-death culture and such sexual perversion, both heterosexual and homosexual. If you have ever once wondered why our American culture is going so rapidly down the drain, it’s not because of MTV (although that contributes). You need look no further than the government’s public schools system. And I’m holding back.

But school test scores are improving,

ACCS Member NSA Honored as One of 50 “All-American Colleges”

What do the University of Chicago, Hillsdale College, Princeton, and New Saint Andrews College all have in common? They are among the fifty colleges and universities honored in the Intercollegiate Studies Institute’s (ISI) soon-to-be-released publication of All-American Colleges: Top Schools for Conservatives, Old-Fashioned Liberals, and People of Faith. The 416-page guide will be available in stores throughout the country later this month.

All-American Colleges provides personal, in-depth profiles of fifty highly recommended schools and programs. At each of these diverse institutions, students who identify themselves as religious believers, conservatives, or old-fashioned liberals will find programs that connect in a special way with the core values of the American founding and the vibrant intellectual traditions of the West—schools and programs that are, in fact, often transformative. Based on extensive interviews with students, faculty, and administrators, the profiles in All-American Colleges extend ISI’s coverage of contemporary academia to accentuate the positive—while including necessary caveats about the unfortunate aspects of each school. The result is a unique new guide that parents, students, and educators will not want to miss.

The ISI is a highly-respected non-profit, non-partisan, tax-exempt educational organization whose purpose is to convey to successive generations of college youth a better understanding of the values and institutions that sustain a free and virtuous society.

New Saint Andrews, founded in 1994, is a limited-enrollment, non-residential college providing an intellectually rigorous classical education firmly grounded in the Christian tradition. The College, which serves students from 30 different states and 20 different Christian denominations, is located in Idaho.

RENWEB Hits 600-School Milestone with Addition of ACCS Member TALL OAKS CLASSICAL SCHOOL

RenWeb School Management Software, announced that it has reached the 600-school milestone with the addition of Tall Oaks Classical School, in Newark, DE. As a member of the Association of Classical Christian Schools (ACCS), Tall Oaks Classical School will also receive a discount for the software. ACCS is the first association to negotiate a discount for the purchase of RenWeb software, offering a valuable benefit to its member schools.

Don Post, Headmaster of Tall Oaks Classical School, said, “We chose RenWeb over other providers not only because of its ability to promote communication among the office, classroom and home, but also because of the convenience and service it offers. Along with other schools in the classical Christian movement, we believe parents play the critical role in assuring their children’s academic success, and they can use RenWeb’s services to keep track of their students’ progress, attendance, assignments and more online. Moreover, RenWeb’s web-based tools are available anytime and anywhere, at home or at the office, and the Company will actually convert our files and set the system up for our school, at no extra charge.”

condition of education within the public school system? Does this sound too bizarre to be true? Don’t read Shortt’s book if you don’t want to know. It will make you angry (and that’s a gracious way to state it). Oh, and you can forget any idea of school reform in your lifetime or that of your child.

If you say, “But we want our children to be ‘salt and light,’” how much more “salt and light” can we take? We’ve seen close to 40 years of this kind “salt and light” in our public schools with the result that our Christian children graduate and reject their Christian faith. How well does a young impressionable third grader stand up for his faith against a far older, experienced and hardened secularist who will mock that child to tears in front of his peers? Bruce Shortt covers this topic and more, much more.

Shortt’s book is written in an easy-going conversational style that makes it a smooth read. It’s only the content that is disturbing, and it’s all factual. This is a frightening book, and it will rattle your senses and sensibilities. As the author quotes from another source, “I am not making this up.” Every Christian in America needs to read this book. It’s honestly incomprehensible how the Southern Baptist Convention, or any Christian denomination in the United States for that matter, could be reluctant in the slightest to demand that all of their members remove their children from the government school system with the greatest urgency. The government school system is without question the gravest danger facing our nation bar none. If Christian parents won’t heed their Bibles, perhaps they will listen to Bruce Shortt’s The Harsh Truth About Public Schools. I sincerely pray so.
